

What teaching methods do you prefer and why?

Top 3 answers

1. I can't say that I prefer one method to another. Each method has certain benefits and should be applied in some situations. In one class I may prefer lecturing, especially if pupils struggle with discipline. Then in some other classes, students are more creative, so I may prefer collaborating. I typically try to apply various methods and observe the reaction of the students, measuring both their progress and interest they show during the classes. After a few lessons I typically know which method works with them, and which does not.
2. As a special education teacher, I definitely vouch for personalized education. In my opinion, individual approach to each students is the key, and it yields the best results, as long as we can afford to apply it in the classroom, bearing the number of students and the number of teaching staff present. I know that you have many assistants and paraprofessionals in the classes. It was actually one of the reasons why I decided to apply for a job with you. I simply knew that in such a setup it will be possible to apply personalized education.
3. It doesn't matter what teaching methods I like. The only thing that matters is discovering the most effective one in each class, each lesson, with each student. This is partially science and partially art. And of course experience helps here, and I do not have it on my side.... Having said that, I have a theoretical knowledge of at least seven teaching methods, and I am eager to try them out in different classes and hopefully identify the winners along the way. This will become easier with each month of my teaching practice. I have to stay humble and patient at the start though. But I can assure you that I won't get discouraged in my pursuit of discovering the fitting teaching method for each class and scenario...
